Manifesto:

In undergraduate math probability courses, can we spend a little less time teaching technique and a little more time emphasizing what the conclusions of theory say about the real world.

So what are the main "conclusions of theory"? No-one else has been brave/foolish enough to write a "top 10" list, so here's mine.