

- Opinion polls actually work.
- You can separate skill from luck in the aggregate but not at an individual level.
- Beware the ludic fallacy – most real-world uncertainty is not analogous to games of chance.
- In a competitive situation, injecting randomness is often helpful.
- Coding for secrecy is essentially the same as coding for efficient communication or storage.
- You're not genetically related to most of your 10'th generation ancestors.